

Hello, I just wanted to express my opinion on satellite radio. I currently have a subscription to XM Radio and I love it because it gives me what FM, AM, Talk, and even CD's can't give me; which is a tremendous amount of variety. It also allows you to check the weather in your area while driving and if you might be traveling to another state you can check the traffic and weather before getting there to plan ahead. To me it's like paying for internet access or extensive cable channels because with these services you can get a wider variety of entertainment that the basic service doesn't offer. I haven't heard anyone talking of shutting down the internet or any cable services when they allow you to get more information than what the news or radio may offer. One thing to keep in mind is how far along technology has come since basic television and radio first began. Why should you have to find a television or call a radio station to get news or weather when you need to know immediately; or why should you have to be aggravated by radio stations that go in and out of frequency while driving, especially in the middle of your favorite song? I hope this message will be enough for you guys to reconsider shutting down any XM services because I, like many, pay for them and really enjoy the many services they provide.

Thank you sincerely, Weston Sitterding
